$ 1 R,

OING tother Day to a Friend's Chambers in Lincoln's-lan, I found the young Barrister reading an old-fashion'd Author, Abraham Cowley, which made me call to Mind these Verses of his,

What shall I do to be for ever known, And make the Age to come my own?

Which repeating once or twice with an Air of Apde, my Friend, who loves Poetry better than Law, aufe, my Friend, who to to taking his Pen, id Let us think upon it a little, and taking his Pen, note down as follows, extempore.

A RHAPSODY.

HALL I, like Broglio, in the Fields of Mars) Seek Glory? Is it always gain'd by Wars? hall I by Arms be rais'd to high Command, and fly at last with Breeches in my Hand?

Shall I like H - l - j in fome Factious Caufe, enounce Religion, Liberty and Laws; y Priefts and Populace get into Power, and make my Way thro' Peerage to the Tower?

Shall I, like St. 7—n, write, and rail, and rake, in ev'ry Side, and ev'ry Side for fake?

6 King and Country False, shall I remain arit with the Character and Fate of Cain?

Like P - y shall I my best Friends betray, nd Honours miss'd, throw Honesty away? all I in Falshood and in Scandal deal, nd mask my Malice with a Patriot's Zeal?

Shall I infult the Worthy and the Wife ith Impudence, and lewd abufive Lies? oth State and Statesmen, shall my Pen attack, nd venture for Renown, my Ears and Neck? What shall I do, &c.

THAT which I misliked in my Friend's Rhapsodo is his Mistake, that the Craftsmen, like Erostratus, deavour to set the Nation on Fire, as the other did Temple of Ephefus, purely to get a Name, and to talk'd of; or rather to come nearer to the Case of the D'Anvers, like a Thief who was hang'd at was some time ago for robbing a Church, and when was going to be turn'd off, said He car'd not, for new Name would be in Print. I really do not believe the affinen to be as ambitious as even these two Rogues, to have any Hopes their Libels will out-live them; that, as a French Wit faid, there is any other Mebry for them than that of the last Year's Flies, unless lice should, in the End, overtake them with her by Heels, and they thereby find a Place in the Reoff to all Sense of Truth, Duty, Decency and Hunity, as to hoard up the Lies, Slanders and Abomins, which their weekly Libel is stuffed with, whatr Pains the Libellers may take to have them folded, if fitch'd, and leather'd up together. They have n at this wicked Work 7 or 8 Years; and among and Infinuations against - tand Ad -n, there is not one that has better Proof than the bare Word or Dream of these pudent factious Impostors. Their History has from Beginning been adulterated and corrupt; their Fable inted and deform'd; their Parallels monstrous and fapply'd; their Allusions forc'd and extravagant; far Arguments fophistical, dogmatical and triffing. his has been often made as apparent as the Sun in a ght Noon, to all those that have Eyes and can see, d will see: But there are no such Men among the film. tion. They are blind, or if they have Eyes, and can fee, they will not fee. This the Craftimer know, and that therefore they may fafely and successfully carry on the Cheat, and make no other Use or being convicted of Lying and Abusing, false Reporting, and false Arguing, than to argue falsly, report falsly, abuse and lie again.

I have read somewhere, what their famous Leader the High German Doctor said to a Person, who repreached him with a notorious Falsity in the Examiner, the Forerunner of the Craftsman, adding, 'tis impossible such a Lye should last above an Exchange-time. The Doctor reply'd, No matter, we have another for To-morrow; and so on. This has been their constant way of working from Roger l'Estrange the first Crastsman, to H - y B - k the last: And yet, forsooth, they want to be argued with, to be answered, as they call it; and their Idiots are in the same Tone, Why don't ge answer bim, cry they, be's too bard for you all. Yes, truly; and so is the weakest Post you can pick out in a Wood too hard for the firongest Head on any Man's Shoulders. To enter into Controverfy with fuch Arguers, is every whit as foolish, as it would be for an honest, substantial Goldsmith to chaffer with a ragged Clipper and Coiner, and change his good Money for Bad, his Gold for the Rascal's Brass. There is no need of entering into Particulars and bringing Proofs. There is not a Man in London, not a Jacobite or Tory, but at the same time he tells you, the Craftiman is Arch and Honest, he will own he is Bold and Daring; all which turned into true English is, he is sawcy and insplent, false and factions: Yet this is the very Person who demands to be treated as one in his fober Senses, and when he is de-fpised and neglected, cries out Io! Triumphe.

WHAT a miserable Creature Caleb D' Anvers is, when he is left to himself, and what stupid ones his Masters are for so leaving him, is seen by that wretched Use he makes of those vulgar Phrases, his Dame, his Mother, his old Woman. He had somewhere or other heard, that when a Person spoke a good deal to little Purpose, the Saying was, He talk'd like an old Woman. It struck his Pancy wonderfully; and he resolved, that the first Writer he fell upon, let him be right or wrong; let him fay more or less; let him be old or young, should be an old Woman. He would, by no Means, let fuch a Witticism escape him; and, for a Year or two, he has almost always decorated his Craftsman with it; like Nicky-Nacky in the Play, makes it his Cucumber, and never fails to put it in all his Speeches. The Fool has not, in all this While, been able to find out that he has used those fine Phrases of his so often, and so long, till he is become the very Thing which he pretended to ridicule, with this Difadvantage, that the more of Life he has yet to come, the fatter will this Character flick upon him, and the Jest he makes last the longer.

THE Secret of the Craftsman is discovered in nothing more than in the late wicked Advertisement of the Bank Contrad. D'Anvers's Masters know better than any Body the whole Proceedings relating to that Contract, Bastard of their own getting; and that the very Man who brought the original Paper to them, to reflect on an Honourable Person, whom, with Tears in his Eyes, he begg'd, for his own Salvation, to approve, and draw it, because, as he alledged himself, be could not do it so well, was the very Man that contrived, moved, and earnestly follicited the concluding of it; which he and they now rail at as iniquitous and ruinous. This is a Stroke of Craftsmanism which outdoes all that Fraud, Malice, Ingratitude and Impudence ever yet produced, or the Craftsmen themselves had ever yet the Face to infult Mankind with. That the Baftard was begot among them, is proved beyond Contradiction, in the three explanatory Papers in the Daily Gazetteer, August 27, 28, 29. where the Guilt and Infamy of that detectable Scandal in their Advertisement, is left on those that entered into a Conspiracy as ainit an illuitrious unblemished Reputation, the least Dazzle of which must sicken their weak Eyes, and corrode in their sick To come lower, and confequently nearer to their Understanding, finding themselves detected and exposed, the Conspirators slip their Necks out of the Collar in this Case, as some of them have luckily done in others, and fneak off, leaving their forlorn Slave D'Anvers to brazen it out with that Forehead which defies Conviction and Shame, and will, whenever fuftice has the handling of him, be as steady and heedless in a Pillory, as if it was disjointed and fixed on a Pole, he being infensible of all the Emotions of a reasonable Soul. Well then, his Masters being run away, some from their Country, and all from the Argument which they had flupidly and infolently drawn into question, D' Anverg, whom it imports much more than it does themselves to keep up the Lye they gave him to subsist upon, undertakes to vindicate their Quarrel, which is capable of no other Vindication than what his own Talents and Virtues can furnish him with, as Lying, pitiful Shuffling, and coarse Ribaldry.

THE first Air he assumes, is that of Superiority over an imaginary Adversary, whom he treats with the Language which others have made common to kimfelf. You cannot think, quoth he, that any Body will take the Trouble of exposing such a contemptible Fellow, which, he fays, requires a great deal of Time to study upon it; and therefore, adds he, I define some Weeks to answer fuch wretched Stuff. But being conscious to himself, that if Years were given him initead of Weeks, he could make nothing of it, he is for cutting the Work shorter, which he proposes to have done, by an humble Acknowledgment from the Opponent, that Mr. D'Anvers is in the right. Probably the Reader will imagine that I abuse even him, and that there cannot be such a Fool in Nature as to drivel in Print fo miferably; but there he is, Craft/man No. 479. and no doubt you will find him in the same hopeful Way in the following Numbers. His Words are, - I give you Time to difavow what has been faid in your Favour; and I do it partly in Justice to myself, because 'tis a Labour without End to answer overy Paper of this Kind; which, with him and his Masters, is, in Truth, no Labour at all: For, after his and their Way of answering, had they Briareus's Hands, they might reply to every Pamphlet and Paper pro and con, that is published in the Universe, they having nothing to do, but, like abandoned Bullies, to affert or deny a Thing, and fwear to it.

D' ANVERS could not see, that, by his fome Weeks, every one would know he meant, he must stay for what will be fent him about it from France, or from as far as France in England; for his Town Maiter had fo great a Hand in the Business which is so horribly condemned in the Craftsman as another's doing, that he durk not fpeak to him for Affidance.

LONDON.

The last Letters from Italy mention several remarkable Robberies committed in that Country. Among others the Dutchess of Madaloni at Naples, has lost a: Watch fet with Diamonds, a Jewel, and other Things, to the Value of 2000 Ducats, for which a Goldsmith and a Footman are apprehended on Suspicion. Don Carlos's Treasurer has been robbed of 3000 Crowns. Twas supposed that a Domestick is the Thief, notwithstanding a Ladder was found set up against the sirst Story, where the Money was. And the Marquis de Cavalieri at Rome, has had Tidings from his Daugh-ter, the Wise of Seignior Francis Caligola at Spoleto, that all her Jewels, &c. to the Value of 30,000 Crowns, have been taken out of her Bureau in her
